Just starting? Follow the ABCs (and D) of smart planning.

There are a few key things to consider as you set out to create your kitchen. You'll come to the right solutions more quickly and easily if you work through these basic steps.

Activities

Think about how you use your kitchen. (Or how you wish you could.) More home-cooked meals or more catered gatherings? Does it serve double duty as your home office? Need a place for your pooch? Planning space and storage around your daily pursuits and recurring events will guide you to the must-haves for your new room.

Budget

A common rule of thumb for a kitchen remodel is to set your budget at 15% of your home's value. Expect to dedicate the largest portion of your budget – at least one-third – to cabinets. Use this as a starting point and adjust to find a number you're comfortable investing.

Configuration

Have a floor plan that works pretty well for you, but just needs a new look? Dreaming about adding an island? Need more room in one particular work zone? Want to start entirely from scratch? Share your layout ideas with your designer.

Dimensions

Grab some rough measurements of your space so your designer knows what you're working with. Include overall length, width and height of the room. Measure and map out all the windows, doors and the location of existing plumbing.

Color Combinations 101

- Create a focal point with contrasting color, like a stained center island surrounded by painted cabinets. Or vice versa.
- Use different finishes for upper and lower cabinets for a designer look. Place the darker of the two colors below the countertop to visually ground the room.
- Worried about color overload? Pair up two similar colors, like Moonshine and Pebble Grey. Or stick with one species of wood, but showcase it in both its Natural finish and in a midtone stain, like Saddle.
